Fluorometric assays are a little more sensitive than colorimetric assays and they are able to detect more of an analyte than colorimetric assays. They allow for a very high reading to be measured by widening the dynamic range. Some labs will combine both techniques by using a clear bottom plate. This allows for measuring a fluorescent probe for one analyte and a colorimetric probes for a ... US3892530A - Colorimetric and fluorometric method - Google ... PRINCIPLES This analysis is accomplished by dissolving the steel sample, converting all of the manganese to the intensely colored MnO_4^- ion, and then determining the percentage of light absorbed by the MnO_4^- for a set of reproducible conditions such as degree of dilution, wave length, and light path length. The problems associated ...
